In Tynwald (November 2011) MHK Kate Beecroft asked about external advisors used by the Department of Economic Development. In his answer Minister Shimmin differentiated between paid and unpaid bodies and revealed the cost.

Which external trade associations, professional bodies, registered charities and consultants are actively engaged with the Department to advise on strategy and service delivery plans; and what the external advisers cost, broken down into (a) expenses and (b) labour charges?

Written Answer:

Since the establishment of the new Department in April 2010, it has been considered appropriate to increase the use of specialists to supplement the skills and knowledge of existing staff. As the Department is responsible for at least 19 separate sectors of the economy and given the manner in which the demand for specialist resources fluctuates, the use of limited-term contracts has greatly increased the expertise available to the Department. This strategy has borne fruit, for example, in the expansion of the e-gaming industry. As a consequence of this policy and other personnel changes, the Department has been able to reduce the number of Civil Service posts from 229.3 full time equivalent posts (FTEs) as at April 2010 to 219.5 FTEs as at September 2011.

The Department has utilised some of these staff savings to develop contracts and relationships with a range of individuals, companies and representative bodies to provide the support and services necessary to assist the Department in moving forward into new areas and developing a more commercial approach to marketing. These parties are utilised to supplement the valued skills and expertise of our civil servants.
These organisations and individuals may contribute to strategy and service delivery plans, directly or indirectly, through participation in forums and meetings or, alternatively, on the basis of a contractual relationship with the Department. Organisations and individuals that are contracted to deliver specific services, (for example, the provision of a business incubator) may have some effect on strategy and service delivery plans, even though that is not their main purpose. The final decisions as to strategy and the contents of the Service Delivery Plan are made by the Minister and Members of the Department.
